BALTIMORE (September 12, 2012) -- The Harry and Jeanette Weinberg Foundation, one of the largest private foundations in the United States, today celebrates the grand openings of the first three school libraries completely redesigned and renovated as part of the Baltimore Elementary and Middle School Library Project. The official celebration will take place at one of those three schools, Thomas Johnson Elementary/Middle School:

Through a multi-media presentation including live video, this event will showcase the transformed library spaces and simultaneous celebrations at all three schools: Thomas Johnson Elementary/Middle, Moravia Park Elementary, and Southwest Baltimore Charter School. Students, parents, faculty, and the community will be able to see the renovated spaces up close for the first time. The Weinberg Foundation will also announce the Baltimore City schools that will be selected for the second year of the Library Project.

“This is a milestone day for the Weinberg Foundation and its many partners,” stated Rachel Garbow Monroe, Weinberg Foundation President. “The grand openings of these wonderful new spaces complete the first chapter of what the Weinberg Foundation hopes will be a long story of improved literacy and learning for Baltimore City Public Schools students. So much has happened in less than a year underscoring the broad support, financial and otherwise, that has been uniquely resourced through the Library Project.”

This Weinberg Library Project involves 30 businesses, nonprofits, and government partners, working with Baltimore City Public Schools to design, build, equip, and staff new or renovated school libraries where existing public funding can be leveraged. As a result of the success of this initiative in just its first year, the Foundation recently increased its overall financial commitment to $5 million for a total of 12 new libraries over four years.

"I am pleased to join the Weinberg Foundation in celebrating the grand openings of three brand new libraries for Baltimore City Public Schools," said Governor Martin O'Malley. "Maryland has become a national model for quality public education, but in order for us to build on the progress we've made, we must provide the next generation with the resources they need to compete and win in the new economy. Our children hold the future in their hands, and working together, we can ensure that they have the tools they need to mold and make a better world tomorrow."

Each new library will feature new equipment, books, furniture, and technology including Nooks, computers, and the "Pratt Library Parents' Place" for parents and guardians to visit the library and share time with their child. The spaces have specially designed smaller areas within the overall space for group and private reading. A graphics package, including signage that welcomes students to the library in more than 50 languages, and murals that literally wrap from the floor to the ceiling are among the innovative design elements of the new libraries.

"City Schools is incredibly fortunate to have partners like the Weinberg Foundation – and the many other partners the Foundation assembled for the Library Project," said Dr. Andrés A. Alonso, CEO, Baltimore City Public Schools. "The three new libraries that are opening today give us a very real example of the learning spaces and resources that all of our students should be able to access. On behalf of City Schools, I thank the Weinberg Foundation for its sustained commitment to the success of our students; in another year, we will have the opportunity to come together again to celebrate three more library openings. School by school, and with the support of our great partners, we'll bring Baltimore City Public Schools into the 21st century."

"These beautiful libraries send such a powerful message about the value of reading and conducting research – a particularly important message now, as literacy takes its prominent place across subject areas under new curriculum being implemented over the next two years," added Dr. Sonja Brookins Santelises, Chief Academic Officer, Baltimore City Public Schools. "And the incredible partnership that made these libraries possible sends an equally important and powerful message to our students: that the whole community cares about them and is working hard to provide them with the learning spaces they deserve."

The renovated library spaces average approximately 2,000 square feet. The total costs of all construction and programmatic activities in each library averages out to $1,000,000 per library of which the Weinberg Foundation contributes an average of $330,000 (roughly a third) for combined capital and operating costs at each site. The balance of the funding is primarily in the form of federal (QZAB) and local (Baltimore City Public Schools) dollars. The Weinberg Foundation has also been able to leverage additional financial and in-kind contributions through its facilitation of the numerous community partners.
